Humanities Institute
February 17, 2016, 12:30 p.m. Luncheon Lecture

featuring:

Fred Lee (Political Science)

This talk interprets U.S. racial power movements in light of Hannah Arendt’s understanding of judgment. Arendt’s notion that judgment appeals to a common sense of the world guides this exploration of how specific black, Asian, and Amerindian activists decided upon their affiliations, conflicts, and demands. Professor Lee will use the 1969-1971 Occupation of Alcatraz Island to exemplify the ways that the power of judgment participated in the constitution of 1960s-1970s racial power movement publics. What he contributes to historical sociological accounts of these new social movements is a political theoretical appreciation of the role of human faculties or “powers” in creating public spaces and popular sensibilities.

Humanities Institute - AUSTIN Building, Room 301. Space is limited. Please reserve seating by contacting uchi@uconn.edu or 860.486.9057